FORWARD

A research into the lives of the Mayors of the City of Clinton, Iowa is a challenging, and, to a degree, a rewarding assignment.

It is challenging, for very few of the mayors have found their lives in the pages of a book. This first attempt to gather information concerning all the mayors of the City is partially fulfilled.

It is rewarding, in a limited degree, in that little or nothing has been written of the personal lives of most of the mayors. The political life of the early mayors is evidenced mostly through ordinances that have been signed by them and little more than that. In the early period of Clinton history, politics seem to have played some part in the news coverage given to a candidate or to a newly elected official.

Books on the history of Clinton are few. A researcher must resort exclusively for historical information on many of the mayors to the Clinton Herald newspaper. Most of the issues of the Clinton Herald are on microfilm but the missing issues are just so many missing links in the chronological record of Clinton's daily history. At times, an election has to be inferred from events which preceded and followed an election date.

Furthermore, there are discrepancies in the date of election for mayors between the few books available and the Clinton Herald. Where such discrepancies occur, the dates recorded in the Clinton Herald were chosen as being the more accurate, for events and ordinances preceding and following an election verified the time of an election.

No effort was made to list the mayors who served pro tem.

The coverage of information given to the mayors is uneven. But to attempt to give even coverage in this study for the purpose of attaining more uniformity in style and amount of content would be to leave unrecorded, valuable and interesting material on some of the mayors.

It is hoped that this research, undertaken at the request and under the inspiration of Mayor H. Edward Obermiller, will be developed into a more detailed history of the mayors and of the City they served.
